Scratching the Itch: The Role of the Pharmacist in De-Labeling Antimicrobial Allergies

Session Date: 02/20/2024

Session Time: 11:00 – 11:45 AM (CST)

Target Audience

This continuing education (CE) session was planned to meet the needs of professional staff who deal with the selection and monitoring of medication(s) as part of their patient care duties, including pharmacists, RNs, APRNs, PAs, MDs.

Activity Overview

Up to 20% of patients in the United States report having an allergic reaction to penicillin, while only 1 out of 10 are truly allergic. These allergy labels lead to the use of non-preferred antibiotics, leading to increased healthcare costs, risk of drug-resistant infections, and adverse effects such as C. difficile infections. Recent updates to the approach to patients with these allergy labels have placed emphasis on clarification of allergy history, direct challenging of offending agents, and proactive, interdisciplinary penicillin allergy de-labeling to improve antibiotic stewardship outcomes. This presentation will review recommendations in the management of patients with penicillin and other common antimicrobial allergy labels as it relates to the role of the pharmacist.

Learning Objectives

At the conclusion of this knowledge-based CE session, participants should be able to:

1. Recognize the difference between IgE and non-IgE mediated allergic reactions.
2. Outline the risk of cross-reactivity amongst common beta-lactam antibiotics.
3. Utilize strategies to de-label these allergies when appropriate.
